RACE BRITAIN SITTING ON A VOLCANO

Notting Hill Carnival shows the reality of life in a 'multi-cultural' society

THE FACT that this year's Notting Hill Carnival did not degenerate into the usual orgy of mugging, mayhem and riot that has now come to be expected is no matter for public satisfaction, despite the efforts of some sections of the media to portray it that way.

The truth is that this annual multi-racialist event was surrounded by an atmosphere of tension, confrontation and violence in the weeks leading up to it, as much as during the August Bank Holiday weekend over which it was held (during which there was sporadic throwing of bricks and bottles at police officers). So much was this so that police thought it necessary to mobilise no less than 10,000 officers for the Carnival — as the minimum that would be required to control it.

These included crack squads of riot police, equipped with special body armour, from the police riot-training centre at Hounslow, who work with regular officers on the streets only in situations considered 'really serious'. The 10,000 officers deemed necessary to handle the Carnival represented no less than one third of the entire strength of the Metropolitan force!

MOB TERROR IN THE STREETS

This massive turn-out in Notting Hill followed a riot by a 1,000-strong mob through the nearby West London suburb of Shepherds Bush two weeks before. The mob, made up of what the press coyly referred to as 'youths', had been turned away from a reggae concert, organised by the 'Notting Hill Carnival Arts Committee', to which most of those going along were admitted to have been young West Indians.

Those refused entry to the show vented their frustration first by hurling missiles at police, and then forming themselves into 'steaming' gangs which rampaged through the neighbourhood, looting local shops and assaulting and robbing any passers-by in their path. The rampage continued as the gangs invaded the tube, attacking travellers at random, and a busload of people were set upon and mugged.

Members of the public sought refuge in Shepherds Bush police station. A police spokesman described the riot as ''an extremely ugly incident. The gangs,'' he said, ''were charging through the streets hitting anyone they could, young or old, they didn't care.''

'BLACK POWER' AGITATORS AT WORK

Meanwhile, in Notting Hill itself, tension was being stoked up by 'Black Power' agitators such as the co-ordinator of the 'Carnival Anti-Apartheid Committee', one Shala Isat. Isat, whose organisation is thought to favour black South African communist gangster Nelson Mandela and his terrorist ANC as models for Blacks in Britain, responded to police plans for protecting public order by openly threatening more trouble.

In his words: ''I don't think the masters can come and tell the slaves how to express their feelings at carnival. The youth are going to confront the police, and there's going to be a lot of violence.''

Significantly, even in the face of such threats at this, the Thatcher Government's appointee as Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Sir Peter Imbert, did not use the powers that he has to apply to the Home Secretary for a ban on the great annual jamboree of multi-racialism in Notting Hill. Nor did he institute any charges against Isat under the Public Order Act. Imbert of course is the fanatical race-mixer who, since his promotion by the Government to be head of our capital's police force, has been threatening ordinary Londoners with the direst penalties for even so much as uttering an unkind word against an ethnic minority member. But when faced with the real threat to public order on the streets, this time mostly from non-Whites, Imbert shows no will to act at all.

GOVERNMENT TO BLAME FOR COLLAPSE OF ORDER

In this matter, as in all others, Imbert can safely be assumed to be acting in full accord with the will of his political masters, Mrs. Thatcher and her Government. Indeed, it is the latter who are entirely to blame for the fact that ordinary Britons, including the police officers in the front line, are now constantly exposed to the kind of mayhem that was always a hideous possibility at Notting Hill.

For it is they, along with the rest of our post-war politicians, who originated the multi-racial society of which the Carnival is the most quintessential expression.

No. We, the British people, cannot regard with any complacency the fact that we are being made to live with a state of affairs such as this. And it is nothing less than an insult when our politicians and their tame media hacks come along telling us that, because there was no all-out rioting and mayhem to compare with some other years at Notting Hill, we have to be grateful for that.

These are the very people who, having originally set up Britain's multi-racial society (without a by-your-leave from the British people), have, as was inevitable from the first, failed to control this Frankenstein monster of their own creation. These, too, are the very people who, in their efforts to hide the chaos inseparable from multi-racialism, are trying to prevent any public discussion of the truth about race in Britain today — by means of their tyrannical race laws and behind-the-scenes media consorship.

VOLCANO

And the truth is that, with multi-racialism, Britain is sitting on a volcano of potential race conflict. Ordinary Britons are themselves growing increasingly resentful at what is going on, an example being the Notting Hill resident who was quoted in the papers as saying, when asked about the Carnival: ''I believe England is for the English. If foreigners come here, they should go along with the system.''

The truth is that it is only by terminating the multi-racial experiment altogether — as recommended by the British National Party — and repatriating all non-Whites to their ethnic homelands and away from Britain, that the most humane solution to this nightmare can finally be achieved.

TORY CON-TRICK ON RACE

TORY POLITICIANS, and the journalistic hacks of the Tory media, have just recently adopted the tactic of kicking up a great song and dance over the policies of militant 'anti-racism' favoured by the Labour Party and pursued by many of Britain's so-called 'loony left' councils. This Labour 'anti-racism', deliberately designed to rub white people's noses in the dirt, consists of calculated insults and outrages committed systematically against ordinary British people still resident in left-wing boroughs dominated by ethnic minorities, and is designed to bludgeon and intimidate these people into submitting to the multi-racialist new order.

These outrages, which mostly take the form of various kinds of what is known as 'reverse discrimination', are now being applied to every area of life, from the schools and council housing estates to local authority employment policy. The aim is to turn the racial hierarchy upside down: white people, but not Afro-Asians, are to be deprived of any right to feelings of racial pride and loyalty, and eventually reduced to a status of inferiority in their own land.

There are, however, reasons why the Tories' supposed 'opposition' to this Labour 'anti-racism' should be regarded as nothing but another cynical pose. To begin with, it has been during Mrs. Thatcher's period of office that Britain's 'multi-racial society' has really exploded, with unprecedented riots and mayhem taking hold of our cities. It has also been under Mrs. Thatcher that the 'loony left' has ridden to power in many of our towns and cities, largely on the back of this race chaos.

Needless to say, Mrs. Thatcher and her Tory Government have never lifted a finger in any meaningful way to prevent any of these developments. In fact, its could be said that they themselves were ultimately responsible, as the government in power, for creating the climate in which such developments could occur.

Above all, of course, the Tories, from Mrs. Thatcher downwards, are all themselves thoroughgoing multi-racialists, and therefore by definition 'anti-racists' — something they do not hesitate to proclaim in both their words and deeds. The 'anti-racism' of the left, which they purport to dislike, is an inevitable consequence of the policy of turning Britain into a multi-racial country — which is Tory policy every bit as much as it is Labour policy. Indeed, for the greater part of the post-war period in which Britain has suffered the multi-racialist transformation Tory governments have been in power. And they have been every bit as eager as Labour in using the race laws to crack down on patriots opposed to the process.

So what is the REAL game of Tory politicians and publicists?

We believe that what the Tories really fear is that the openly and explicitly anti-white policies of the left might have the effect of engendering a backlash against the whole concept of race-mixing, especially among young Britons. The Tories do not differ one iota from the left over the desirability of biologically destroying the white race by assimilation with Afro-Asians.

And in the meantime the whole ground of the debate about the racial future of Britain is shifted. Public passion is concentrated simply onto the irrelevant question of HOW

BRITAIN PAYS THE PRICE FOR TORY POLICIES

New economic crisis as the nation plunges into the red

BRITAIN is facing a trade crisis.

Her monthly trade deficit for July was announced last month as standing at the all-time record level of £2.15 billion — more than twice the figure predicted by Chancellor Nigel Lawson.

The immediate cause of this crisis is said to have been the consumer 'boom' of the past couple of years, to which Lawson's easy credit policies have given rise. These policies in fact go back to the time of the 1987 general election, when it was part of Mrs. Thatcher's strategy to bribe as large a section of the electorate as possible into voting Tory, with the illusion that Tory rule had brought about some sort of 'economic miracle' for Britain.

But now the Government's short-lived 'boom' appears to be fading, as the nation plunges ever further into the red.

The whole thing seems in fact to have been artificially contrived by the Tories and their shadowy puppet masters in the City of London. Interest rates were reduced at Nigel Lawson's instigation, and financial institutions were given an ever freer hand to churn out credit in vast quantities. The process now seems to have backfired,

LAWSON
Taking the can for policies for which the whole Government, including Mrs. Thatcher, should be blamed as it becomes plain that this credit served mainly to fuel the demand for foreign goods — to a far greater extent than Lawson himself had been predicting.

The result? Britain is now living massively in debt to the rest of the world, and this debt on her overseas trade has been incurred overwhelmingly by the purchase of manufactured goods which she should easily have been capable of producing for herself.

BOGUS ARGUMENT

As the crisis broke, both the Tories and the media, especially the Tory press, tried to trivialise it into another Tory Party soap opera. All discussion was reduced to the question of which bunch of Tory bigwigs had been 'right' in their views as to how the nation's economy should be manipulated, and which bunch had been 'wrong'. Thus, the public stage was rigged to present the Prime Minister as the one who was allegedly 'right' for having just recently come to doubt the wisdom of Lawson's 'easy money' policies. Lawson, meanwhile, was placed in the dog-house as the sole blunderer.

It was of course never explained why, if Margaret Thatcher (who, to begin with, appointed Lawson) felt her Chancellor to be wrong, she did not exert her prime ministerial authority to bring him into line on a matter of such national importance. In the meantime, as Maggie, Nigel and their partisans stage their puny public tiff, Britain's future economic welfare is lost sight of, as is the question of what is really wrong with the economy and who is truly to blame.

UNDERMINING OF BRITISH INDUSTRY

In fact, Mrs. Thatcher has never been right, any more than has Mr. Lawson.

Quite simply, Britain could not have lapsed into her present disgraceful state of foreign indebtedness if she had not in the first place been deliberately thrown into a position of dependency on imports of foreign manufactured goods. And Margaret Thatcher's Tory Government, all of whose members are fanatical internationalists, have, as a matter of openly admitted policy, done all they could to undermine even the limited degree of self-sufficiency that Britain had in manufactured products when they first came to power.

From day one in office, the Tories' handling of the economy has been a scandal, amounting to nothing less than treason against the nation's industrial future. From the start of this decade, the Thatcherite Tories have systematically wrought a huge destruction of Britain's productive capacity. The moment they came to power they raised interest rates to unprecedented levels in a credit squeeze that choked off investment in our own industry. Whole branches of British manufacturing and technology collapsed in consequence, which in turn caused mass unemployment.

The high interest rates, which British industry could not endure, simultaneously raised the value of the Pound as against foreign currencies and the foreign goods priced in those currencies. These foreign goods consequently became very cheap in terms of British pounds, and the British market was flooded with imports.

Mrs. Thatcher refused point-blank, as a matter of principle, to protect British industry by closing our home market to the foreign flood. This accelerated the destruction of British manufacturing, and Britain became yet more enmeshed in the web of international trade than ever before, as, with the elimination of her capability to produce an ever-increasing range of products at home, she was compelled to buy them from abroad.

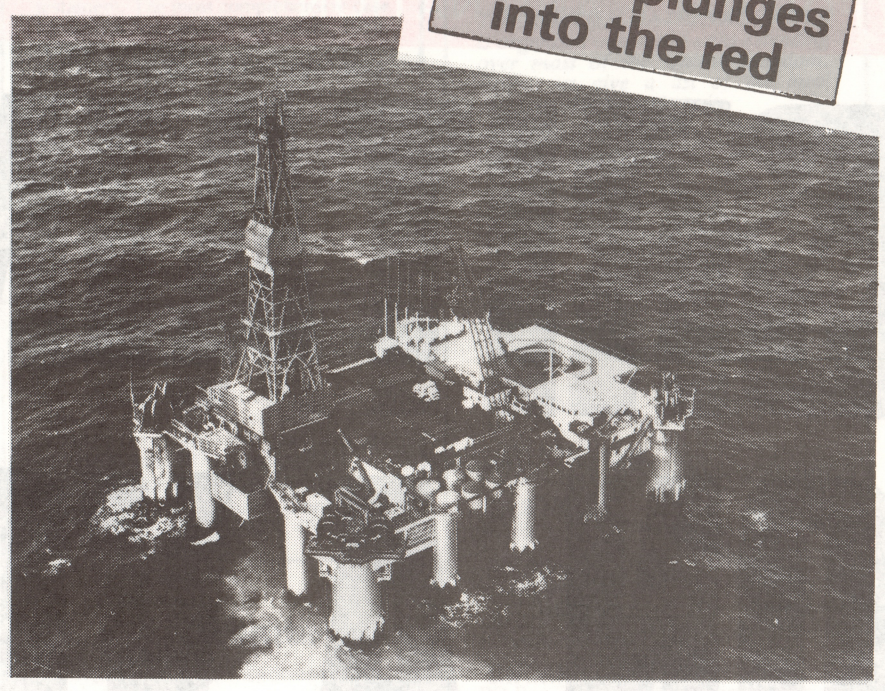
INTERNATIONAL FINANCE BENEFITS

It is no mystery who was profiting from all this. As British industry was starved of investment and the British worker made redundant, the cosmopolitan financial fraternity of the City of London was given a freer hand than ever before to export Britain's capital overseas, in order to build up Britain's competitors.

And all the time Britain was running up a bigger and bigger trade gap, a bigger and bigger international debt, in the area of manufactured goods. The only reason that this did not immediately show was that North Sea oil production was then sufficient to cushion and conceal from the British people the consequences of the Thatcher Government's policies.

The long-term national interests of Britain in the conservation of her oil reserves did not enter the Government's caculations. Instead, it allowed private (and largely foreign) financial interests to plunder what should have been regarded as a vital national asset — for short-term profit.

In the cynical view of Mrs. Thatcher,



NORTH SEA OIL
Exports no longer plugging up trade gap

the tax revenues accruing to government from oil production could be used to pay dole to the millions of British workers whom she had thrown onto the scrapheap, whilst oil exports would plug the trade gap caused by our massive imports of manufactured goods as Britain's domestic industrial producers were driven to the wall.

Today, however, because of these government policies, North Sea oil is running out, and the contribution that it can make to overcoming Britain's foreign trade deficit is in sharp decline.

'RECOVERY' A MIRAGE

Meanwhile, despite the Tories' vaunted 'economic recovery', there is little real sign that Britain is in the process of acquiring any new sources of wealth or means of wealth creation to replace oil. Even the so-called 'recovery' of British industry can be seen largely to be a mirage, created by the focus of Tory press propaganda being placed on a few individual firms that have performed well while ignoring the broader tendency of continued decline.

British industry is in no way being rebuilt by means of new investment from British sources. On the contrary, in keeping with their internationalist dogmas, Mrs. Thatcher and her Government have deliberately encouraged the sell-off of surviving British companies to foreign multinationals, whether Japanese, American

MRS. THATCHER
Seen here at opening of Nissan plant in Sunderland, she has welcomed the increasing foreign take-over of British industry or based in the EEC.

These foreign concerns gaining control of British firms are to a large extent only interested in turning our factories into assembly plants for components made in their own countries. The same is true of firms like the Jap car giant Nissan, which set up plants in Britain from scratch. Not only do British component manufacturers stand to be driven out of business as a result (causing additional unemployment), but such machine parts assembled, but not made, in Britain figure as imports, and as such add to our foreign trade debt.

In fact, no less than £303 million, out of the £1.5 billion jump that the disastrous July trade deficit represented over the previous month, was accounted for by imports of components.

And this must be added to the vast imports of finished goods, including capital goods — machinery needed by factories in Britain, much of which is no longer available from any domestic manufacturer.

GUTS TORN OUT OF BRITISH INDUSTRY

Taken together, these facts and figures go to show how the guts have been torn out of British industry and technology by Mrs. Thatcher and the internationalist lobby for which she fronts. It is indeed questionable how far such a thing as British industry can any longer be said to exist. By and large, British firms and factories today are little more than a wafer-thin facade, masking both foreign control and foreign-imported machinery and technology.

Easy credit is being blamed for the crisis of the moment. But there could be no objection to this if the new finance put into circulation in Britain were exactly parallelled by equivalent increases in production within the British economy, and if all such finance were spent entirely on the output of the British economy. In such conditions, there would at all times be an exact balance between production and consumption, supply and demand. There would not exist any danger of too much money chasing too few goods, i.e. inflation.

But with her home market wide open to imports and her manufacturing capability devastated, Britain is not in this strong position. As fast as new money is lent into circulation, it is disproportionately used to buy imports, rather than goods produced at home. The trade deficit thus corresponds with a long-term growth in Britain's money

TERROR IN NORTHERN IRELAND

Why nothing will be done

IT IS nigh on 20 years since the terrorists started their present campaign in Northern Ireland to oust Britain from that part of the United Kingdom. In that time, the lives of many men, women and children have been brutally taken. Many of these people have been among the bravest and most upright this country has produced — loyal part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, dedicated members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and of course many soldiers of the Army itself. Along the way, others have been murdered, including a member of the Royal Family, the British Ambassador to Ireland, judges and political leaders, not to mention the many decent citizens of Northern Ireland, like those killed at Enniskillen last year.

ANOTHER ATROCITY ABOUT WHICH NOTHING WILL BE DONE
A bus and cars wrecked after IRA attack in West Belfast

Every time there is a killing by the thugs of the IRA, the same predictable weasel words are uttered in response by the same gaggle of contemptible liberals and socialists, urging everyone to do nothing, telling us not to 'overreact' and promising the most vigorous prosecution of the fight against terrorism. After Warrenpoint nine years ago, the same utterances could be heard echoing throughout the media as are now heard after Ballygawley.

Expressions of 'outrage' and 'heart-felt grief' have vied with each other in the rhetorical stakes. Assurances that steps would be taken, that terrorism would not be allowed to destroy our 'democracy', that panic measures taken in response to violence must be resisted — all contended with each other on the Richter scale of sanctimoniousness. Calls for forgiveness, mercy, compassion and repentence have risen up to the heavens from assorted clerics, prelates and bleeding hearts.

BUT NOTHING IS EVER DONE TO WRAP UP THIS GUERILLA WAR AGAINST A BUNCH OF ANTI-BRITISH DESPERADOES. WHY NOT? BECAUSE WE ARE GOVERNED BY TRAITORS!

COWARDICE

The politicians at Westminster, whichever party has been in power since 1968, are spineless and craven cowards, totally without the will to win this war. And why do they not have the will to win the war? Because, deep down, they do not WANT to win it!

It is pointless bemoaning the lack-lustre efforts made by this Northern Ireland Secretary or that Northern Ireland Secretary to find a solution — because no meaningful solution is being sought! The policy is to wait until these traitors can disengage from Northern Ireland completely and hand the province over to the Irish Republic — on the pretext that the British people have had enough of this 'pointless' struggle and that we cannot afford to lose any more British lives.

The Northern Ireland problem can only be properly resolved when these traitors are removed. And that will only come with the victory of nationalism on the British mainland.

And when that victory does come the removal will be swift and decisive, as will be the measures to crush terror in Ulster.

To begin with, the known leaders of the criminal gangs that have been terrorising Ulster will simply be 'taken out' by the SAS, with the latter operating with full lawful backing of the Government.

All attempts by the supporters of these thugs will be ruthlessly suppressed. Sinn Fein will be disbanded and its leaders thrown into jail. The frontier will, for the first time, be properly guarded and patrolled. And all those who wrap themselves in the Irish Tricolour will be rooted out and deported to the Republic. As for 'world opinion', it will be ignored and dismissed as irrelevant. The 'Anglo-Irish Agreement', needless to say, will be scrapped.

NEED TO CLEAN OUT THE WESTMINSTER TRAITORS

But before this can happen we must rid ourselves of the traitors at Westminster, as well as their renegade helpers, aiders and abettors in all walks of life in this country. Until then, whatever occurs in Northern Ireland the result will be the same as now, as in the wake of Enniskillen, as in the wake of the barbarous murders of Corporals Wood and Howes, as in the wake of Warrenpoint and as in the wake of hundreds of other similar murders and atrocities: empty platitudes and promises — but total inaction.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I have become sick to death over the past weeks of hearing black olympic athletes competing in the colours of this country described as 'British'. Whatever their merits in the sports in which they compete, they are not my countrymen and I take no pride when they win medals.

G.D. ALSOPP (Mrs.)
London S.E.5

Sir, — Britain is now over £5 billion in the red! For once, the establishment and its servants on TV news have admitted that this due to the flooding of the British market by foreign imports, such as Jap cars. Even so, our rulers won't do anything. They are against protecting our industries, as they are committed to the internationalist economic system.

One car company manager said on ITN: "We had a choice of buying British cars but we chose a Japanese model." How typical of big business to put profit before the national interest and the well-being of British workers. The need for economic nationalism and autarky has never been greater.

JOHN WALKER
Bolton, Lancs.

Sir, — 1992 is a date that all British Nationalists should watch carefully. It is the year that the 'Single European Market' (a further step towards the United States of Europe) will begin. National borders will come to have even less relevance; foreign workers will be able to come more easily into our country. Further steps towards a Euro-currency will no doubt have been taken, and a European passport will make British nationality a thing of the past. All this is intended to mean the end of the British nation-state.

And when full European political integration comes — as it is intended to do shortly afterwards — our independence will be gone.

The British National Party has four years to fight this take-over by European internationalism, which is dedicated to the destruction of all the independent nations of Europe. We have got to reach the British people now! If the Government refuses to hold a referendum on Europe, we should conduct one ourselves. We have got to ask the British people: Do you want to be European or British?

I am certain that the majority, if asked this straight question, would prefer to remain British. I am certain that there is massive opposition to Britain's integration into Europe. We have got to lead and organise this opposition. This may be the year of action, the year we've been waiting for, when the British people will rise up and fight for their survival.

J. NELSON
Plymouth

Sir, — I would like to express my gratitude to the British National Party members who attended the protest against the recent pro-IRA march in North London.

The verbal — and physical — support given in opposing this anti-British activity was very much appreciated. In spite of their far greater numbers, the marchers were confronted and prevented from continuing — until the police restored order.

It was also very gratifying to see the effort made to co-operate with the police officers present, despite the very provocative manner in which the republican marchers conducted themselves.

GROWTH OF THE MANDELA INDUSTRY

HAS YOUR TOWN got its Mandela Street, Mandela Square or Mandela Community Centre? If not, why not? It seems that no British city can raise its head in pride unless some area of it is named after this vile communist terrorist. 'Mandela mania' has struck this country with a vengeance.

NELSON MANDELA
Terrorist and thug made into a popular hero by the media

We were pleased to see that the white people of at least one northern town put up a successful fight in obtaining a court injunction to change yet another Mandela Street into one with a more patriotic-sounding name — against the wishes of the terrorist-worshippers of the local Labour-controlled council.

Nelson Mandela, oddly enough still sporting the first name of a great British hero, is, as is well known, the imprisoned leader of that ugly gang of black marxists known as the African National Congress (ANC), who have their lavishly funded and equipped offices in most major European capitals.

However, developments after Mandela's recently over-publicised birthday have taken a new turn, revealing a shocking tale of greed and corruption, which is riding high on the back of the rapidly-growing Mandela industry.

BIG PROFITS

Mandela's wife Winnie, when not urging black children to set fire to Blacks loyal to the South African Government, has seen the vast possibilities of making a quick dollar or two out of her husband's well-planned 'martyrdom'. She has hired a rich and unscrupulous New York black businessman to handle all her husband's affairs, and turn the project into a big profit-yielding business. This means that this slick black capitalist, who is now Mandela's 'agent', can set about sucking nice fat profits from all the assorted reds and 'liberals' who worship Mandela — by using the family's name as soon as copyright is established.

WINNIE MANDELA
Profiting hugely from her husband's 'martyrdom'

The Mandela bandwaggon is now such a profit-churner that get-rich-quick pop bands, such as the 'Specials', when making their recent 'Free Nelson Mandela' song, pocketed the whole proceeds — not a penny going to any Mandela cause but everything going into their own and the record company's bank accounts.

Not that Winnie herself has done badly. She recently moved into a plush new home back in South Africa that must have taken at least half a million to build. Winnie, incidentally, is a dedicated 'socialist'.

These are just the tips of the iceberg of the Mandela industry. When the rest surfaces, you'll be able to catch the stink of fraudulently acquired money, pouring into the various Mandela accounts and ANC front charities all over the world.

Verdict on the Olympics

BRITAIN NOT GOOD ENOUGH!

THE OLYMPIC GAMES have just finished as this copy goes to press. Once again, Britain's performance leaves much room for improvement.

Our athletes won 24 medals including five golds. This was less than East Germany, South Korea, Hungary, Bulgaria and Rumania — all countries with much smaller populations than our own. Our performance reflects on the low physical standards of much of the British Race, and the lack of a true 'will-to-win' attitude on the part of government towards helping British sport.

REPRINTED HERE is a report from The Daily Mail of September 9th, covering Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe's visit to Mozambique. The report will seem barely credible to those people who imagine that Britain has a 'Conservative', i.e. 'right-wing', government, and that Britain, under this government, is supposed to be part of a 'Western Alliance' against communism.

If the Tory Government is genuinely against communism, what is its Foreign Secretary doing giving the clenched-fist salute to an audience in a communist country? And what is Britain doing providing arms to that country and helping to train its forces? If the people knew the answers to these questions, they would know the answers to a great many more perplexing riddles in present-day national and international politics!

SIR GEOFFREY HOWE: WHOSE SIDE IS HE ON?

Sir Geoffrey: Peace pledge

Clenched fist greeting from Comrade Howe

IT was a clenched fist salute that even the Marxists of Mozambique were amazed to see. It came from the British Foreign Secretary.

But Sir Geoffrey Howe was a hero to thousands in the front-line town of Magude yesterday when he raised his arm and shouted: 'The struggle continues! Long live the friendship of the peoples of Mozambique and Great Britain!'

Pledging another £30million in aid, he said: 'We will help you achieve peace and prosperity.' His visit to the wartorn junction of the historic Limpopo railway was an event which locals rated second only to seeing the Pope.

On the same day, the Pontiff was in the capital Maputo, for a 'mass of millions' attended by South Africa's Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

Yesterday, Russian helicopters packed with Mozambique troops whirred overhead to ensure Sir Geoffrey's safety.

Armoured vehicles carried British-trained soldiers, their green berets, camouflage suits and combat boots supplied by Britain, their AK 47 rifles by Russia. It demonstrated the paradox of the 13-year civil war in which a Marxist government has been supported by Russia and Britain against South African-backed rebels.

Later the Pope called for an end to violence in Northern Ireland during a meeting with Sir Geoffrey in Maputo.

The plea was seen as a significant new initiative on the Irish question.

Successful 'Day of Action' in Yorkshire

A FULL DAY OF ACTION hit Yorkshire on Saturday, 24th October. In the morning, Wakefield activists counter-demonstrated against a CND demonstration with a special leaflet designed for the occasion, and they have followed this up with a press release exposing the red connections of this subversive organisation.

At mid-day, an all-Yorkshire team of activists sold British Nationalist at the Leeds United versus Chelsea match at Elland Road. The 'Anti-Fascist Action' cowered behind police protection, despite their earlier claims that they were going to 'smash the BNP'.

At 2 p.m., members and supporters from all over Yorkshire gathered at the Leeds HQ for a meeting addressed by Sheffield BNP speaker John Wood and guest speaker Gus McLeod, from Glasgow BNP, who gave an excellent speech on the IRA threat to Ulster.

In the evening, a full gathering packed a private room for a social, which featured a nationalist 'mastermind' competition, which attracted seven budding masterminds. A really fun-filled and relaxing evening was had by all — after a hard day building the movement in Yorkshire.

In recent weeks there have been continuing signs of a great revival of the BNP in Yorkshire, following a temporary slump at the end of last year. Not only has the Leeds Branch gathered fresh strength and become more active, the previously little-active Wakefield Group has become one of the most active units in the region. In addition, a new group has recently been formed in Huddersfield, a scene of much nationalist activity in the early 1970s.

POST OFFICE RAID

WE HAVE HEARD that during the recent postal workers' strike there was a burglary at the Forest Hill Sorting Office in South London, where British Nationalist and other BNP mail is stored prior to collection.

It is very possible that some mail due for us was stolen in this burglary. If there are any readers who sent in items during the strike and have had no replies, would they please let us know.

Building Fund: £2,761 needed!

£315 has been received in contributions to the BNP Building Fund since our last issue. This is a disappointing sum considering that it was over a two-month period.

This leaves £2,761 still to be raised.

We hope that in the next month or so all supporters will dig deep into their pockets to help us do better in our progress towards our target, which is to obtain the HQ this year!

All contributions should be marked 'Headquarters Fund' and sent to PO Box 446, London SE23 2LS.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Isobel Hunter

IT WAS with great sadness that we recently heard of the death of Mrs. Isobel Hunter, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Mrs. Hunter was 68 and for years had been regularly active in the BNP Tyneside Branch, up till quite recently continuing to travel with the branch all around the country to attend major party activities.

Mrs. Hunter will be greatly missed by all who knew her, and we take this opportunity to send our condolences to all members of her family.

supply which is out of line with her own production. This in turn will cause, and is causing, inflationary pressure.

But Thatcher and Lawson, like all other politicians of the established and 'approved' parties, are wedded to the idea of the internationalisation of the British economy. They will not break with the internationalist system. This means that they will always try to meet the kind of situation we are now in by raising interest rates, squeezing credit and thereby pushing up unemployment. They will never remedy the crisis, which their policies have brought about, by closing Britain to foreign manufactured imports and foreign control.

Under their regime, Britons will therefore be permanently threatened with the Devil's choice between unemployment and runaway inflation.

TIME FOR REAL CHANGE

It is high time for the international system to be swept away and replaced with the radical solutions of nationalism.

If Britain is to be liberated from the economic trap of internationalism, she must be freed from dependency for her national needs upon imports — except in those areas of goods which she cannot produce herself. If necessary, whole new industries must be built up from scratch. This will have to be done behind trade barriers that exclude at least all manufactured goods.

Meanwhile, a strong state will be needed to master the nation's financial resources and direct them in accordance with the national good. British investment capital must be channelled into the home economy, where necessary by compulsion. It is also the proper function of government to regulate the flow of finance so as to match supply with demand in the economy, bringing about stable prices and ensuring full employment.

Such a state should also take upon itself the task of guiding the British population away from the mentality of materialism and self-indulgence, deliberately engendered by the politicians of Westminister and upon which the international system relies. In the place of this, a new spirit of patriotism and discipline are needed, along with a willingness to subordinate individual greed and the individual ego to the national welfare — a development that runs entirely contrary to everything that has been happening in the society that has been encouraged by Mrs. Thatcher.

By this path alone lies the way to true national recovery.

multi-racialism is to be brought about, and distracted away from the real issue of whether it SHOULD be brought about.

We Nationalists are the only party in politics who say unequivocally that multi-racialism should be ENDED — full stop!
